groes. To have made a racial distinction To have made a racial distinction among the employes might have had a disastrons effect, on account of internationi complications. So it was decided to make the distinction, not in the color of the skin, but in the color of the money with which the laborers were paid. Therefore, there was a "gold roll" for the higher class of employes, and a "silver roll" for the lower class of employes, the one paid in gold and the other in silver coin. How this system works is interestingly told in the chapter "The Negro Workers" in "The Panama Canal" by Frederic J. Haskin. LIOUOR LAWS ARE

Grand Jury Report Says

The report of the grand jury follows:

"We have thoroughly and to the best of our ability investigated all matters brought before us.

"We have found 75 true bills, about one-half of which number are for violations of liquor laws. We find numerous social clubs, so called, beling run as saloons in strict violation of the laws, but holding charters issued by the state. A number of these have been organized and promoted by saloonmen and beer agents solely for the purpose of the sale of liquor. They are not only disorderly houses, and very detrimental to the good society and morals of the community, but are also an injustice to the saloonmen who are trying to run their saloons in accordance with the law. We recommend that the court and all peace officers of the state, ecunty and city take aggressive steps to vigorously prosecute and stop the numerous violations of the liquor laws in our community which are rapidly on the increase, and we further recommend that a copy of this report be sent to the altorney general and the secretary of state.

"We are informed that the county storney has but one week in two months to prosecute criminal cases and owing to the crowded docket it is impossible for him to try but few cases of indictments found by the grand jury, and we would strongly recommend that some provision be made for the early trial of all liquor cases.

"We have investigated violations of election laws on numerous complaints of poll taxes being paid illegally, but have been unable to obtain sufficient evidence for indictments.
